SCI Limited Edition Print

Nationally recognized as both an accomplished painter and sculptor, Terry Lee credits his love of the outdoors to his father. An avid hunter and fisherman, Lee's father would often take Terry and his brother on adventures in the back country of northern Idaho. It was on these outings that Lee learned the value of hunting, not only as a way to put food on the table, but to gain appreciation for the big game animals he paints and sculpts today. Lee spent his youth on a working ranch just north of Coeur d' Alene, Idaho, later opening a sporting goods store with his brother. An avid scuba diver, Lee was a certified scuba instructor and taught for 18 years. While teaching in Southern California, Lee began to explore the possibility of pursuing art full time. In 1994 he returned to Coeur d' Alene where he divides his time between canvas and clay. Lee's trademark use of giant canvasses and use of bold color encapsulate his contemporary impressionistic style. He began sculpting through his friendship with master sculptor George Carlson. The two worked together for over 10 years, sculpting from live models, honoring his skills.

Wood Chainsaw Carving
(displaying here tonight)

Mark Bosworth from Athol, MA has been carving for more than 20 years. A fascination with all forms of sculpture and enjoying working with wood led Mark to try his hand at carving wood. Preceding his attempt at woodcarving was a lifelong love of the outdoors and wildlife which led Mark into the art of taxidermy. It was also combined later with many hours of field watching, filming, and studying the wildlife around his home. He began with small hand carving and immediately began to win top honor awards at competitions at every show he attended. Making use of bigger and powerful sculpting tools, mainly chainsaws, has now brought much more recognition to his artistic talents. He received the third highest honor at his first attendance to the “Chainsaw Carvers Rendezvous”, the largest gathering of chainsaw artists in the world held in Ridgway PA, in 2014 and the first highest honor in 2015. Mark also received the 1st place title at the 2015 New York State Chainsaw Carve Championship Competition.
